

Online Safety

The internet can be great for finding information, playing games, or even meeting people.

But there are rules you should follow to stay safe.

Don't give out personal information like your address, phone number, or bank information.

You should avoid talking to strangers.

People are not always who they say they are and sometimes don't do what they promise.

Avoid unknown or unsecure websites or chatrooms as these can be unsafe.

@ASERTPAautism

@asert_paautism

@ASERT_PAautism

@asert

Online Safety

To help protect your privacy and safety, keep computers and accounts password protected.

Only share passwords and account information with parents or trusted adults.

Sometimes people may need to access your personal information and accounts to help you.

Could I access your account to help with medications?

These people can be parents, teachers, or doctors. They should ask permission first.

Always save the files on your computer in case there is a problem and things break.

If you feel uncomfortable when interacting with others online, leave the situation and ask someone you trust for help.

I have to go.

