

Relationships, Part Two: Family Relationships

There are many different types of families and different types of family relationships.

People usually have 'close' family relationships with their parents and brothers or sisters. This is called your 'immediate family'.

Sometimes, people can have close family relationships with grandparents, aunts, uncles and cousins. This is called your 'extended family'.

People in family relationships usually feel love and closeness for each other.

You can talk to people you have a family relationship with about many different things, including things that are very personal.

Parents, grandparents and other older relatives often provide support and help as part of a family relationship.

This campaign promotes the idea of body autonomy for individuals with disabilities. ASERT has partnered with researchers at the National Crime Victims Research and Treatment Center at the Medical University of South Carolina to develop resources for the Be Safe campaign.

The Autism Services, Education, Resources and Training (ASERT) Collaborative is a statewide initiative funded by the Bureau of Autism Services, PA Department of Human Services.